

The Fil Doux Story

Fil Doux is a family owned, completely vertical fabric mill, producing textiles in Chile and Brazil for the past 80 years. We've been involved in hospitality for 12 years here in the United States, supplying some of the most amazing hotels around the world. Our headquarters is in Brooklyn, and all of our fabric uses New York as the FOB point.

We've developed a unique yarn called Fabu-Touch, where the polyester (strength) yarn is wrapped by cotton (softness) yarn, giving our fabrics a soft hand, but meeting hospitality standards. Because we are the mill, we can add yarn to meet any double rubs count that you may need (usually avoiding backing). And being completely vertical, we dye, weave and add all finishing products under the same roof. It's pretty amazing!

And when we say we've got a great GREEN story, it's pretty impressive.

Fil Doux recycles all of their yarn dyed water runoff. What most clients don't know is that in the yarn dying process, the water runoff tends to be the biggest polluter in fabric production. Fil Doux cares deeply about the earth and the footprint leave behind, and insures that our dyed water runoff is 100% recycled. Most other mills (especially Asian production) pump this waste water right back into the oceans and waterways, never giving it a second thought.

· 80% of the electricity needed to run the Fil Doux mills comes from wind generated sources (think windmills!) How cool is that...wind mills harnessing 'wind', a natural resource, that is then turned into electricity. It doesn't get much greener than that!
